Dr. Gabby L’Esperance is a qualitative researcher and program evaluator who is passionate about magnifying diverse populations’ voices through narrative-based research.

As the director of insights for Military Family Advisory Network, Dr. Gabby L’Esperance leverages qualitative methodology to better understand the lived experiences of military and veteran families. Through Gabby’s leadership and emphasis on the value of qualitative methods in understanding military life, MFAN continues to shine a light on the support military families need most. Such research has been used to convene stakeholders, shape policy, develop programs, and invoke positive change for service members, veterans, and their families.

Dr. L’Esperance holds a doctorate in public administration with a focus in nonprofit management and research from the University of Nebraska Omaha. She also earned her masters and bachelors from James Madison University. Gabby teaches nonprofit management courses at the University of Nebraska Omaha.
